Looking ahead with Mr. Hertz

U-High's New Principal, Mr. Karl Hertz, hopes to promote innovation and communication when he comes here next year. Mr. Hertz was selected from two finalist candidates chosen by a faculty committee after months of searching for, and interviewing, prospective principals. Lab Schools Director Philip Jackson made the final choice.

Mr. Hertz, an easy conversationalist, has visited U-High with his wife and three children (ages 14, 13, 7) several times during the past three weeks. He seems enthusiastic and keenly interested in U-High and his future as a principal.

Mr. Hertz explained that he was drawn to U-High because of "the mystique of the U of C, the Lab Schools and Hyde Park and the benefits of U-High's fine reputation. So far I have a feeling of strong faculty with a strong impression of the school. The students have been straightforward and seem to want to get to know me."

Brebeuf High in Indianapolis, from which Mr. Hertz comes, is a private boys' school similar to U-High in size, class lengths and types of restrictions. But it is more innovative. Mr. Hertz has been there 10 of the school's 13 years, principal for three.

Mr. Hertz explained that Brebeuf employs individualized instruction in numerous courses and an "extremely conscious effort exists on the part of the entire school to have outsiders contributing to classes—teachers from nearby high schools or colleges, parents and anyone else in a field related to the course subject. As well as bringing people into the school, we try to get the students to work on class projects outside of the school."

Mr. Hertz would like to promote similar innovative programs at U-High. He also hopes to be a communicator and facilitator. He would try to increase communication at U-High, by encouraging interdepartmental conferences and meetings between students and teachers. "I'll try to bring the components of the school together but my primary interest is curriculum. Also, it's important for a principal to be a part of all school functions and activities, not necessarily planning, just involvement."

Mr. Hertz said he will actively seek opinion by making his office a place where everyone can come to talk. But in the end, he said, he will make the decision. "I'll try to bring the components of the school together but my primary interest is curriculum. Also, it's important for a principal to be a part of all school functions and activities, not necessarily planning, just involvement."

Mr. Hertz sees some possibilities for improving the grading system at U-High. "At Brebeuf, we use grades as a motivational method, not a hammer to frighten people into working. There are no Fs, just A B C D and No-Credit, and we often use contract grading where a teacher and student write what is required for what grade. Such a system, Mr. Hertz feels, "would be beneficial for just about every school including U-High."

Looking ahead to his first year here, Mr. Hertz said "it will be largely a statement of observation, let me hope to get to know the people and the school as soon as possible."

... and with Mrs. Fallers, too

FOR THE SECOND TIME in 13 years, Margaret Fallers is leaving U-High. But, she hopes, like the first time, she will not be gone for long.

At the beginning of the year Mrs. Fallers announced that she would be leaving U-High to accompany her husband Lloyd, a professor in the Department of Anthropology at the University, to the University of Virginia, where he had been appointed chairman of the Anthropology Department. Later, Mrs. Fallers became ill and they decided to remain here. The University recently announced a distinguished professorship for Mr. Fallers.

Mrs. Fallers now plans to take a year off from teaching to aid her husband in recovering and to aid him in writing a book about Turkey. She previously left U-High for a year in 1960-61 to study Turkish culture with her husband. She hopes to return to U-High as a social studies teacher in the future.

Mrs. Fallers has never been far from U-High for long. She was here first as a student—Class of '39—and then as a teacher, beginning in 1960. She was named principal in 1970. She feels both saddened and relieved about leaving the principal's office.

"I found it very interesting and challenging but hard work. There's a great deal involved in keeping the school together. I'm not going to run out the door waving my arms and jumping for joy. It's just that I have to devote my time to something else, helping my husband recover," she explained.

Of the difficulties of being principal, Mrs. Fallers said, "A principal has to keep a subtle balance between vision and leadership. You've got to hear and help people do what they want to do but do what's right at the same time. This is a school in which a lot of people like to take part in making decisions. But everybody can't have a part in every decision. It's a problem we just have to keep working on."

Mrs. Fallers feels that the development of the Council on Procedures and Rules two years ago represented a major step in involving people in the decision-making process. "It's just about the only place where students, teachers and administrators get together outside the classroom and make decisions together."

Other major accomplishments during her administration, Mrs. Fallers feels, were an increased concern for the rights of others, improved school spirit and a wider women's athletic program.

"On the other hand," she added, "there are a lot of things that I wish had gone further. I had hoped that students, teachers and administrators would do more things together outside of the classroom. I'm sure just about everybody feels the same way. It's important that teachers be concerned with the student inside and outside the class. Also, people have to keep working for more thoughtfulness, more concern for each other. There are some groups of students who don't have a feeling of comradeship. I wish I could have gone farther in creating a real sense of community."

Her greatest regret, Mrs. Fallers explained, was that she didn't know as many students as compared to when she was teaching. "This year was the best of the three in that way," she said. "I know the most students."

"Each year as principal seemed better to me, more steady. I'd do it over again. I think I'll stay another 13 years."

Little involvement behind elections here tomorrow

By Beegi Pullock, political editor

Characterized by a lack of involvement on the part of the student body and student government, all-school elections are scheduled for tomorrow.

U-Highers will elect officers of the Student Legislative Coordinating Council (SLCC), Student Board and Cultural Union. As of Midway deadline Thursday, students had announced candidacy for four of 10 available positions. Only one office was contested. The candidates at that time were as follows:

Cultural Union—President, Junior Dan Kohn, who presently holds the office; Vice President, Junior Andy Davis; Treasurer, Junior David Melamed.

Other than Gordon Gray and Hinojosa, who had decided to run after the Midway's deadline, no students were known to have collected the required signatures by yesterday and to have appeared in the Little Theatre during lunch today to display their platforms and to field questions.

If no candidates were to run and Gordon and Hinojosa hope to clarify the roles of their respective organizations, Gordon through a constitutional change, Dan through a publicity campaign. Andy is running because he thought involvement in government might be interesting, although he said he was not sure what he would try to accomplish.

Alan said he was running as a member of the Progressive Student Suppoy, which supposedly was planning to slate candidates for nearly all offices. But other candidates representing the party had not announced at deadline. The Progressive Party, according to Alan, wants to bring power to students through referendums and bring their results before the Council on Procedures and Rules.

David said he wanted to make Student Board a more frequently used mechanism.

Apathy and disilllusionment or satisfaction with the status quo are the primary reasons for non involvement in this year's elections, according to Senior Peter Getzels, SLCC vice president who is in charge of originating elections. He didn't blame students for not running, he said. "The interest is really low. Students realize that state government is not a place to do it. The people who aren't running because they don't care aren't the only ones who aren't running. The student power issue of a few years ago is no longer an issue. They're not even token issues. People are lazy and superficial."

Dean of Students Strandord Carmichael, SLCC's internal advisor, said non participation in the matter of elections has been casually handled this year. SLCC is sort of an unknown quantity, a casually and sporadically functioning legislative body.

This year prospective candidates had a week and a day. (April 30-May 1) to run for office, pick up their petitions and get the 50 signatures on them, and campaign.

Preceding years, the time span between the announcement of upcoming elections and the elections themselves has been at least three weeks.

According to SLCC President Joel Roberts, a week is sufficient time for interested students to campaign and petition.

Peter said he felt that "kids can get 50 signatures in one day. Since the offices are uncontested, it's almost like a sign-up."

Social Studies Teacher Earl Bell is SLCC's official advisor, but he says he has advised in name only because "when I asked them what sort of an advisor they wanted me to be, they said "we don't intend to do much, so just leave us alone.""

He feels that students see that student government is largely a negative experience in citizenship.

Several U-Highers attended a convention and workshops on the role of minorities in media May 3-5 at the Sherrard Hotel. Seniors Ted Dailey and Kevin Spencer, Junior Rich Williams and Freshman Rachelle Large were signed up at deadline to attend the program, which included workshops on radio, television, creative writing, journalism, advertising, art, graphics and music.

Two get jobs in city program

Juniors Susan John and Doug Mazique are among 100 Chicago high school students who have won positions in Mayer Richard Gacy's summer job program. They were selected from 2000 applicants and 300 finalists underclassmen.

Susan and Doug were selected from nine applicants by members of the Council on Procedures and Rules.

They will be notified of exactly when they will start sometime next month.

After deadline:

Senior Joel Banks played third in second annual Journalism contest held by the Associated Press Editors Association and took fourth in first year competition in the Illinois Press Photographers Association.

Senior Joel Banks won honorable mention for his portfolio and an individual photo. The Midway won honorable mention for its use of photos.

The Midway also has, for issues published so far this year, the highest rating A-plus, from the National Newspaper Service with headquarters in Memphis.

Reflections on a teachers’ meeting

Women’s liberation, gay liberation and the student, counter-cultural and anti-institution movements were among subjects discussed at a Teachers’ Leadership Conference on Social Movements April 23-26 in New York City, sponsored by Craft’s Teacher Nella Weiner.

Mrs. Weiner learned about the conference a year ago and applied for an invitation. She believed she was selected as a “teacher leader” because of her involvement in the American Federation of Teachers and many faculty committees. The conference paid part of Mrs. Weiner’s expenses.

The conference consisted of lectures, question periods and one small group discussion period. A program on black movement was planned but cancelled because the main speaker was unable to attend. “They didn’t really need a big name. I felt there were many intelligent, vocal people at the conference with much to say about the black movement,” Mrs. Weiner said.

The program that interested Mrs. Weiner the most was one on the American Women’s Movement. “One man spoke about a book on prisons and mental institutions and he suggested that their situation was analogous to that of schools.” She added, “I’m going on leave of absence next year. It suddenly hit me that this would be the first time in many years that I wouldn’t be divided into 5-minute fragments.”

“Told a lot of the other speakers were really talking down to us,” she said. “She cited the women’s movement program where two speakers discussed a sexually-biased reading program. ‘That seems a bit too convenient a target,’ she commented. ‘Nothing got much meatier than that.’”

“I would have been very interested in having more informal contacts,” Ms. Weiner added. Citing the small group discussions in which people were asked to name the “most interesting thing about it,” she said, “The nice thing about it was that it presented a variety of opinions. Most of them were intelligent and well-stated. It’s important to hear opinions from outside Hyde Park.”

78 seniors plan for May Projects

Seventy-eight of 130 seniors are expected to work in May Projects May 14-26, according to Mary Rose, 1st-grade teacher.

Students participating in May Projects, with the list subject to change, are as follows:

Lecturer decides not to ‘lecture’

By Abhijit Chandra

Mrs. Muriel Beadle was supposed to give the annual John Dewey Lecture in May to students in Lower School. She decided not to instead of giving a lecture, however, she decided to tell the students.

The Dewey lecture is sponsored by the Parents Association. Previous speakers traditionally have dealt with some area of education. Mrs. Beadle’s announcement topic was the relationship between women today desiring liberation to Victorian women desiring liberation. It included five biographies of Victorian women explained in Mrs. Beadle’s introduction that she was “simply tired of lecturing on education.”

“Nothing got much meatier than that.”

Come here, Igor

Training turtles and testing growth hormones, among other projects, students in Mr. Jerry Ferguson’s Advanced Biology class have designed their own experiments this quarter. Senior Phyllis Kambi is training turtles by rewarding responses to a blue comb.

Recent disclosures linking top government officials with last minute burglaries and break-ins of many U-Highers interviewed by the Midway, have led many to believe that this is the biggest scandal since Watergate.

None of the U-Highers interviewed were surprised by the prospect of corruption in government according to Senior Lisa Lefkow who lived in Chicago. She said, "I couldn't really be too surprised about any corruption.

Junior Jim Grant commented, "I thought the federal government was more intelligent than they were. The corruption wasn't particularly amazing. It's the fact that they got caught that surprised me.

Many of these questioned didn't expect corruption to be linked with school government officials but, nevertheless, they feel the investigations should be carried through until all guilty parties have been discovered.

Lies noted that "government isn't as clean as it should be. I hope the investigators don't stop with a few lower officials.

Freshmen Mike Orlikoff felt, "All those politicians are crooked. It's about time they got caught."

And, according to Senior Edwin Grettz, "Right now it wasn't surprising if Nixon was involved directly."

Most of the students felt that corruption in government couldn't only be narrowed down to Republicans or the Nixon administration. Kara's statement was typical, "If it goes on, she said, "it goes on on both sides."
BSA’s, Onyx: Mixed reactions, from pride to anger, greet ’73 literary magazine edition

From pride to anger, widely varied reactions greeted the publication of Onyx, the Black Student Association’s literary magazine, during Black Arts Week, which began April 22. The staff had broadened the content of the magazine to include interviews and opinion as well as literature, poetry and art. For the first time, all students and teachers—not just blacks—were invited to contribute. The editors attempted a more professional appearance for the publication and for the first time sold ads to finance a larger and more polished magazine.

The magazine’s editors generally said they were satisfied with the outcome and only hoped for more contributions in the future.

“I was happy with the results,” said Junior Steve Massaquel, one editor. “Onyx provides a way of letting other people know what others think, especially black.”

Senior Kevin Spicer, another editor, explained that “The magazine is designed to just please people. We were showing the recent black world as it is.”

Many white students said they thought the expressions of political and social views were ridiculous and that complaints of white discrimination in the school were fantasized (also see Midway Mailbox page 6).

Some students expressed concern of the existence of separate black and white activities in the school typified by Onyx. “I thought Onyx was good,” said Senior Robin Siegel. “The article on Norm Ambrosini was very well written. I felt it was saying that abortion was a problem being used to control the black women.”

“They don’t understand how we feel, or how it is to be a minority group,” said Freshman Rachelle Large, another Onyx editor. “Some black people think like they want them to in.”

BSA’s plays: Some fun stereotyping, some missed messages

Stereotyping, done in jest, can provide an evening of humorous entertainment. U-Highers who watched this year’s two Black Student Association (BSA) plays probably came away with that impression. Which is unfortunate, because there probably was a lot more important to learn from these productions.

“Happy Ending” and “A Day of Absence,” both by Douglas Turner Ward, played in full-length runs April 28-29, treated with human shortcomings—mainly those of whites—through satire and good for a laugh. The actors managed to make the for-humor-than for-real factor believable, but often the audience seemed uncomfortable. These types of performances are considered offensive by some blacks.

Vocal and Advanced Vocal students will sing solos and ensembles in their final concert this year, 3rd and lunch periods tomorrow in the Little Theatre. Students, faculty and parents are invited.

TWO STUDENTS hoping to perform on television are Junior Mariye Boone and Senior Carol Siegel. The two will compete this month with students from throughout Chicago for places on “The New Performers,” an annual talent show. Mariye and Carol were chosen to represent U-High in April 10.

Role rules have been cast and rehearsals are underway for this year’s May Festival play, Thursday-Saturday, May 21-23.

The four-act comedy, “The Merchantman,” by Theora Wider, will be directed by Drama Teacher Lucilla Ambrosini. The Midway will endeavor to stage the fully in two acts May 29 made possible by a grant from student government.

Final games tell tale

U-High's pep purveyors

By George Anders

Faculty leader Peter Cobb calls it "the purveyor of school spirit." Student leader Jerry Robin calls it "a bunch of sickness having as much fun as possible." Whatever it is, the Pep Band is four years old, fourth at U-High, having already played at more than 20 events, this year mostly baseball and soccer games.

Jerry, a five-year student in his fourth year, and Mr. Cobb, now affiliated with the Independent Learning Project, have been in the Pep Band since its start. Stunts through the years have included soccer, basketball games against student government representatives, a dive-in performance at a swim meet, and a karaoke performance in those clothes during a basketball game against conservative Morgan Park Academy.

The Pep Band's activities have been "at the limits of good taste," according to Mr. Cobb. "But no one really objected." This year's only serious complaints have come from two other schools. St. Michael's and Morgan Park refused to let the band play at their schools, officially because of a lack of space. But Mr. Cobb feels this is a cover up. "Actually, they're just worried that we have too much spirit for them to handle."

The 16 Pep Band members don't shy musical instruments. Those that do have only group practice this year, for a karaoke performance. Jerry feels that "making lots of noise and joy" is more important than playing polished music.

Plans for the rest of this year include an unauthorized appearance at graduation, playing at a chess match, and a climactic last game performance at the home field, 48th Street and Cornell Ave. According to Mr. Cobb, "We'll be playing our kazoos and then we'll take off all our clothes and run into the lake."

A blow for fun and safety

By Matt Freedman

"Number one, it's really a great deal of fun. And number two, I like to hit people."

That's why Sophomore Rachel Stark takes karate lessons 6:30 p.m. Monday and Friday at the Noyes Hall. Rachel is one of seven U-Highers participating in classes, sponsored by the University's karate club. The others are Seniors Karen Baehr, Eve Snaid, Amy Wagner, and Amy Bernstein, and Freshmen Cathy Stark and Celia Jones. The fee is $4 for each quarter, $80 for returning students.

Most U-High karate students say they take lessons for enjoyment and personal protection. "This isn't the kind of neighborhood where you can walk around at night with $10 hanging out of your pocket," Hal explained. A friend from New York with a green belt in karate persuaded the Bernstein's to take lessons. The Bernstein's, in turn, persuaded Rachel. Amy was convinced when she saw her friend apply a karate lock to several muggers. Hal began the course at the beginning of the school year and is now a green belt, having surpassed his sister both in white and yellow belt levels.

All the students interviewed said that the lessons, aside from being fun, increased their feelings of safety on the street. Nevertheless, they all stressed that they would not take any unusual risks because of their proficiency in karate.

"If you see someone coming to mug you," Hal advised, "the best thing to do is still to run." Most students of karate, he explained, are not skilled enough to deal with an armed mugger effectively. He practices some free-sparring. "I've had one incident, an accident which occurred last year. A Homeboy and a couple of 10 black hood karate student was attacked by three armed men. Reportedly he saw two of the attackers and took care of them easily, but the third stuck in the shadows and shot him. No matter how good you are," Hal reflected, "you can't stop a bullet."

"No matter how good you are," Hal reflected, "you can't stop a bullet."

THE MAROONS' strong first doubles team, Juniors Danny Rudolph and Andy Stern, is their special asset. Mr. MacFarlane said, "Our singles," he added, "need much improvement." District matches will take place Saturday at Eisenhower High in Blue Island.

U-High will host a post-league invitational tourney, Tues., May 29, here.

GIRLS' TENNIS—Three opponents remain question marks for the girls' tennis team, in its second season and with a new coach, Miss Patricia Segher.

"Because there is no organized league this year, there is no championship to fight for," she added.

Remaining meets are against Latin 4 p.m., Fri., May 11, here; Francis Parker, 3:45 p.m., Tues., May 15, there; and Ferry Hall, 4 p.m., Fri., May 25, there.

Exactly $520.01 was raised by a benefit basketball tournament sponsored Friday by the senior class gift in the parking lot. The senior class gift, fiberglass backboards for the basketball court.

Each player paid a $2 donation. Each spectator donated 25 cents.

The backboards will cost about $185. Tournament organizers expect the additional $250.00 needed from school funds.

The U-High nine also will participate in the Illinois High School Association district games May 14-16 at Quigley South, but Mr. Kneisler does not know who the opponents will be.

The varsity junior squad has three remaining league games, North Shore 3:30 p.m. today, here; Lake Forest, 3:30 p.m., Friday, there; and Francis Parker, 3:30 p.m., May 25, here.

The boys remain league track meets will be important indicators of U-High strength in District Play May 19, according to Coach Ronald Druz. Time and place will be announced as later.

U-High will face Morgan Park Academy 4 p.m. Thursday, there, and Francis Parker, 4 p.m., Thurs., May 17, here. Then Peoria State and Colonels took 1st and 2nd place respectively in the last meet, "They are the teams to beat," Mr. Druz emphasized.

BOY'S TENNIS—A closely matched league schedule makes the next four league matches decisive ones for U-High, according to Coach Larry Weber.

COACH Terry Kneisler says, "two games are the most a team can afford to lose." The varsity team with the highest league, three doubles, is their special asset, Mr. MacFarlane

The others are Seniors Karen Baehr, Eve Snaid, Amy Wagner, and Amy Bernstein, and Freshmen Cathy Stark and Celia Jones. The fee is $4 for each quarter, $80 for returning students.

Most U-High karate students say they take lessons for enjoyment and personal protection. "This isn't the kind of neighborhood where you can walk around at night with $10 hanging out of your pocket," Hal explained. A friend from New York with a green belt in karate persuaded the Bernstein's to take lessons. The Bernstein's, in turn, persuaded Rachel. Amy was convinced when she saw her friend apply a karate lock to several muggers. Hal began the course at the beginning of the school year and is now a green belt, having surpassed his sister both in white and yellow belt levels.

All the students interviewed said that the lessons, aside from being fun, increased their feelings of security on the street. Nevertheless, they all stressed that they would not take any unusual risks because of their proficiency in karate.

"If you see someone coming to mug you," Hal advised, "the best thing to do is still to run." Most students of karate, he explained, are not skilled enough to deal with an armed mugger effectively. He practices some free-sparring. "I've had one incident, an accident which occurred last year. A Homeboy and a couple of 10 black hood karate student was attacked by three armed men. Reportedly he saw two of the attackers and took care of them easily, but the third stuck in the shadows and shot him. No matter how good you are," Hal reflected, "you can't stop a bullet."
One season's not enough

Soccer in the spring

By Abdijit Chandra

Soccer in SPRING? That's what 18 U-Highers are doing. They have organized a Hyde Park Soccer Club with the help of Mr. Hezekiah Katz, former substitute teacher and assistant fresh-soph soccer coach.

They will play five games in the junior division of the national soccer league this spring. So far, the team's record is 1-1.

Each U-Higher paid $5 to gain entrance to the league and pay for uniforms.

Mr. Katz recruited the team because he wanted to make Hyde Park a really excellent soccer team at U-High next year. He feels the spring play will give the teams a head start in the fall.

The players on the team give up their weekdays after school to practice at 4:15 p.m. and Saturdays and play home games 10 a.m. Sundays in Washington Park, near 50th Street and Cottage Grove Ave.

"That's the only complaint I have about the team," said Coach Katz, "not being able to sleep late on weekends." Most of the U-Highers tried, unsuccessfully, to put together a team in the spring of 1977. So why are they doing it again this year?

According to Junior Danny Kohrman, another co-captain, "because playing for the club will be like an overseas summer." Mr. Katz feels the players will improve because "the level of playing is higher in this league than in the Independent School League (in which U-High teams play)."

Many of the clubs we play are comprised of players from ethnic groups who play soccer a great deal.

But they're all behind her now. So is the first place field hockey trophy. That's a story in itself.

The Maroons broke a three-year streak to North Shore by defeating them 3-4. At that time Miss Masterjohn said, "This was the year to win the championship." But the girls' teams have had a league to be champions of.

Was it the year? It was, and they did.

Games precede dinner honoring girl athletes

By Katy Holloway

IT'S BEEN a good year, two first places and a second.

Volleyball Coach Janis Masterjohn was reflecting on the varsity team's triumph over Latin, second place behind Morgan Park, a team which Miss Masterjohn considered the toughest opposition for both freshman-soph and varsity.

The event was started last year by Katy Holloway, because "we feel that the girls should get awards the same as the boys." The boys' banquet, a long tradition, is scheduled for June 6.

A satisfying year for girl athletes

VIP

"U-HIGH VIP" shirts like Freshman Class President Tracey Everett's will be the common sights around U-High soon. Tracey arranged for a special order of the shirts after receiving an advertisement in the mail. More than 100 students ordered shirts.
